Dunkin' Donuts, the world's largest coffee and doughnuts franchise, is adding the Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) to its growing collection of 1,000 locations. The franchises will not only sell MoMA's offerings but will also donate a portion of their revenue to the non-profit institution. The initiative is part of MoMA's Continue Culture program, which aims to increase museum attendance and deepen public understanding of the arts by donating 15 percent of the licensing fees from the sale of beverages and food to the museum. A recent survey found that 25 percent of U.S. millennials visit museums more often because of pricing, ease of acquisition, and speed of entry. The MoMA DDD kiosks will set up shop for two hours on weekends this summer, starting with The Bronx, where MoMA's West and East buildings are located. This is the third location opened in the last year. MoMA opened their first overseas store in the U.K. in June and a pop-up store at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in April. There will also be a sixth location in The Bronx, which will open its doors on July 13. Two new stores in Manhattan and Brooklyn will open in the coming weeks. The coffee and doughnut shops will serve MoMA's "Talks" series, an online initiative that curates short-form talks through MoMA Talks, MoMA ArtLab, MoMA Talks on Film, and MoMA Talks on Arts and Activism. MoMA has also partnered with W Hotels and Wynn Resorts to introduce new offerings, including Harnett's Rum Monkeys at the Wynn Encore and MoMa Donuts at the Wynn. MoMA launched the new kiosks in the U.S. in March and in the U.K. in June.Q: Java inner class catch and rethrow exception I have a situation where I need to create nested classes that are inner to a superclass. I would like to catch exception that the inner classes throw and rethrow it in the superclass so the outer class can handle it correctly. For example, say I have the following: public class Client { public void request(Context context) { Server server = new Server(context); DoDo()
