Is it necessarily true that the function f is increasing? Is it necessary and sufficient for f to be increasing? I know the necessity. In fact, if f is increasing, then by the intermediate value theorem, there exists an $x\in[a,b]$ such that $f(a)=f(x)$ and $f(b)=f(x)$. Since $f'(x)>0$, we have $f(x)>f(a)=f(b)$. This is a contradiction. A: For a counterexample, set $f(x) = \sin(2\pi x)$. The derivative is $2\pi \cos(2\pi x)$ which is 0 if x is rational and positive for irrational x. But f is increasing for irrational x: for x_1, x_2 irrational with $x_1 \sin(2\pi x_1)$ by the intermediate value theorem. {.139} {.140} {.141} {.142} ![](envh 82157476af
